

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

It is so well known as scarcely to require to be mentioned, that up to the present time no work has been laid before the public, in which the transactions arising out of the management of the affairs of vessels have been made to furnish the materials for a set of books, according to the methods adopted in mercantile book-keeping; or in which the forms and purport of those accounts that are rendered to their co-part owners or principals, by ships' husbands, captains, and consignees, have been accurately shown and clearly explained.

This deficiency has been particularly felt and regretted by all who, in the course of their naval career, have endeavoured to gain some proficiency in a branch of instruction so highly necessary for either the satisfactory discharge of their duties to their employers, or the proper regulation of their own concerns; for entirely dependent, hitherto, upon the suggestions of their own judgment, they have found it to be a task of great difficulty to avoid confusion in the statements of their accounts; while the systematic regularity of skilful book-keepers has been altogether beyond their attainment. It has been therefore for the purpose of supplying this acknowledged want, by furnishing the naval accountant with a correct and competent guide to the principles, technical terms, and general arrangements of book-keeping, that this epitome, which forms the concluding chapter of the new edition of "Steel's Shipmaster's Assistant," has been written; and it is now published separately, for the convenience of those who are not extensively engaged in the direction of shipping.

Another inducement for its appearance in its present form, arises from the circumstance of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade having made it one of their regulations, in the examination for certificates of captains and mates of vessels, that they should possess a knowledge of mercantile book-keeping. Further facility is therefore required, to place the means of complying with this regulation within the power of many of those to whom it applies, and the author is induced to hope that his endeavours to show the manner in which the principles of the science may be made applicable also to nautical book-keeping, will prove of great service to all who may become candidates for these honourable testimonials of their qualifications, and will thereby forward, in some degree, their lordships' very praiseworthy design of elevating the professional character of the merchant-navy of this kingdom.

NAVAL BOOK-KEEPING.

NAVAL BOOK-KEEPING is the art of recording the monetary affairs of a vessel. It is regulated in its details by the same general principles as those of mercantile book-keeping.

According to the arrangement we shall adopt, we shall divide this subject into three parts: in the first part we shall explain the principles of book-keeping with respect to the general purposes of accounts, their classification, and the forms of direction and reference which are used in the entries of transactions; in the second part we shall show the plan of a set of books of account, in which are recorded the transactions of the managing owner for the outfit and voyage of a vessel; and in the third part we shall exhibit the particular forms of the accounts rendered by the ship's husband to his co-part owners; those of the auxiliary accounts of the receipts and disbursements of the captain of the vessel and of the ship's agent or consignee, with the same of the chief documents which have reference to these accounts.

PART I.

PRINCIPLES OF BOOK-KEEPING.

General Purposes of Accounts.—The general purposes of accounts are to ascertain the amounts of the debts owing to us and by us, of the property of which we are possessed, and of the gain or loss that has resulted from our transactions.

The means by which these purposes are attained are by recording in separate accounts, first, the particulars of the state of our affairs at the commencement of the series of transactions, and, subsequently, the same of all transactions that affect the purposes of book-keeping.

Classification of Accounts.—In treating upon accounts, they are usually arranged in these three classes:—

Accounts of persons.

Accounts of property.

Accounts of profit and loss.

To these may be added, as a branch of the first of these classes, Our own account. Each account is divided into two parts, which are distinguished the one from the other by the terms "debtor" and "creditor," and we are guided in making the entries in them by the directions of the following general rules:—

- Rule 1.—Accounts of persons are to be debited for the debts they owe us, and credited for the debts we owe them.+
- Rule 2.—Accounts of property are to be debited for the property that comes into our possession, and credited for the property that goes out of our possession.
- Rule 3.—Accounts of profit and loss are to be debited for any loss, and credited for any gain on these accounts.
- Rule 4.—Our own account is to be debited for the property we take out of the concern, and credited for the property we bring into the concern. ‡

REMARKS ON THESE RULES.

- 1. The book containing the various accounts which it is found necessary to open is called the Ledger, and the two parts of each such ledger account are usually placed the one beside the other, either on the same page or on opposite pages, the debtor part being on the left, and the creditor part on the right; but in other accounts, the one part is frequently placed under the other, whether the two parts are equal or not in amount. See the Ship's Consignee's Account, in Part III.
- 2. In the general ledger form of accounts, arithmetical subtractions are not used; and, therefore, in order to take off a sum of money from one side of an account, it is placed upon the other side of the account; and thus, as we debit a person's account for the money he owes us, we, on the reverse, credit his account for what he pays us, as becoming indebted to him for the same.
- 3. Accounts of property are debited for the property we possess at the commencement of our transactions, and they are frequently debited and credited from other causes than those stated in the rule, as for disbursements on the one part, and for returns or reimbursements on the other part, as may be seen in the Ship's Husband's account, in Part III., and in the Ship's account, in the following Ledger.
- 4. Accounts of profit and loss are such accounts as those of charges, interest, commission, &c., which are frequently opened in the ledger for the purpose of showing how much has been gained or lost under each of these heads; but when such particular information is not required, entries of this nature are commonly made, as in the following ledger, in the general profit and loss account.

^{*} This is not always the case with separate accounts of property, for the two sides of a cash account are sometimes marked with the words received and paid, of a goods account, with bought and sold, &c.; but in ledger accounts of this nature, the debtor and creditor form is always used; and it is to such accounts that reference is made in discussing the principles of book-keeping.

[†] To debit or credit an account is, it hardly need be said, to make an entry on the debtor or creditor side of that account.

[†] The word "concern" is used to signify trade or any other purpose, as the ownership and management of a vessel, for which capital is employed.

- 5. The account opened for the proprietor of the concern appears in the ledgers of different persons under different heads or terms. Some call it a Stock account, some a Capital account, and others keep it in their own names, as is done for the account of William Barclay in the following set of accounts.
- 6. As general remarks on the heading of the accounts comprised in the first three general rules, it may be noticed, first, that the terms debtor and creditor are applied to accounts of persons in accordance with their literal meaning, as being our accounts with those persons; secondly, that these terms are used for accounts of property and profit and loss, solely for convenience of direction and reference, or for avoiding the use of that multiplicity of terms which would be required if each part of each account bore that appellation which would show the nature of its contents; thirdly, that the two portions of the second and third rules are arranged as stated, in order to let the debit or credit of an account of property, &c. form that balance or counterpoise to the credit or debit of a personal account, which is required for making up the ledger upon the principle called double entry, as will be further shown in the remarks on the forms of direction.

Forms of Direction and Reference.—The original entries of transactions are commonly made in some other book or books than the ledger; and, for the purpose of assisting the proper carrying of them to account, directions for the debit and credit are usually given in the following manner:—

To direct the debit of an account, we write the word Dr after, or the word By before, the title of the account.

To direct the credit of an account, we write the word C after, or the word To before, the title of the account.

REMARKS ON THESE FORMS.

1. When one account is to be debited, and another account is to be credited for the same transaction, the first form of direction is to be used for the first account, and the second form for the second account. Thus supposing, that in consequence of N. Goodwyn having become indebted to us, we have to direct the debit of his account, and that in consequence of cash having been paid him (or having gone out of our possession), we have to direct the credit of the cash account, we may give such directions in either of the following forms:—

N. GOODWYN Dr — to Cash.*

(or) Cash Cr — By N. Goodwyn.

Directions like these are often read in this manner: —
 Debtor, N. Goodwyn — Creditor, Cash.

If we further suppose the sum of money to be £100, the entries when carried to account in the ledger will thus appear:—

Dr	Dr N. G00		Cr
To Cash	- £100.0.0
$\mathbf{D^r}$	CA	SH.	$\mathbf{C}^{\mathbf{r}}$
		By N. Go	odwyn - £100 . 0 . 0

- 2. When the entries of either single transactions or classes of transactions are made in the ledger, as in the foregoing manner, or with the amounts of the debits being made equal by counterpart entries to those of the credits, or the reverse, the ledger is said to be kept by double entry; but when it is intended that the information to be derived from the ledger should be limited to the knowledge of only what debts are owing to and by the party whose books are kept, then the accounts of property and profit and loss being excluded from the ledger, the counterpart entries cannot of course be made, and this book is then said to be formed by single entry.* It is therefore only with reference to the ledger that these terms of book-keeping, single and double entry, apply; although, according to which of the two methods is practised, some difference is made in the heading of the entries in the journal.
- 3. The phrases commonly used in ledger entries are for reference to the counterpart entries: thus the phrase To Cash, in the preceding debit of N. Goodwyn's ledger account, refers to the counterpart entry on the creditor side of the Cash account; and the phrase, By N. Goodwyn, on the creditor side of the latter account, refers to the counterpart debit of the former account. As a summary of the significations of these phrases of book-keeping, it may be observed, that they are used only to distinguish one side of an account from the other side; to direct where the entries are to be made in the ledger, or to refer to the counterpart entries; and that the terms debtor and creditor, when applied to accounts of property and profit and loss, are not intended to convey any idea of the personification of these accounts; but, as said before, they are so applied only for the sake of uniformity and convenience of direction and reference.
- 4. Sometimes there are two or more causes of the debit or credit of an account; and then, in order to avoid making separate journal entries for each part, the whole of them are combined in one entry, the word Sundries being used as a collective term. Examples of such forms of entry are to be found in the last entries in the following journal; and all that is therefore necessary to be here noticed is, that in the enumeration of the accounts to be credited, the sign of credit, To, is placed before each, but in the same of the accounts to be debited, no sign of debit is prefixed.

^{*} See the end of Part II. or further observations on single entry.

5. In the making out of accounts, custom has authorised the use of the terms To and By in the sense of for or on account of, as in this form:—

Mess^{rs}. Bovet Brothers & C°. Dr.

To the Owners of the Adela
To Freight &c.

- 6. The principal difficulty in book-keeping consists in the forming of the journal entry; but this difficulty may be readily surmounted by attending to the following directions:—
 - 1. Investigate the transaction to be recorded, in order to ascertain in what manner it affects the purposes of book-keeping.
 - 2. Consider into what accounts it is to be entered in the ledger.
 - 3. Give the directions for carrying it to such accounts in the manner explained in the preceding remarks.

In inquiring into the nature of the transaction, we may put to ourselves the following queries.

Has any person become indebted to us?
Have we become indebted to any person?
Has any property come into our possession?
Has any property gone out of our possession?
Have we to record any loss?

Have we to record any loss? Have we to record any gain?

If the answers to the preceding questions are given in the names or titles of the ledger accounts, they will show into what accounts the transaction is to be entered; and in each class of these questions, an answer thus made to the first part will show the account to be debited, and the same to the second part will show the account to be credited.

In order to explain in what manner this proposed investigation is to be put into practice, we will take the supposed transaction before noticed, in which we have to record the payment of money to N. Goodwyn. The reply to the first question would be, N. Goodwyn, as becoming indebted to us; and to the second question, relative to accounts of property, the reply would be, Cash, as going out of our possession. From these replies we find that the accounts in which the transaction is to be entered are those of N. Goodwyn and Cash; and from the general rules, we are directed to debit the first, and credit the second of these accounts; consequently, if this transaction were entered in the journal, the directions, as before shown, would be—

N. GOODWYN Dr. -- to CASH:

If entered in the Cash Book, it would be placed with other payments on the creditor side, and in this form: —

BY N. GOODWYN.

The questions which refer to accounts of property frequently require to be varied, or made thus:—

Has any disbursement been made on account of property? Has any return been obtained on account of property?

PART II.

BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In the foregoing statements, directions, and observations, only the principles and modes of forming separate entries have been taken into consideration; and, presuming that these have been sufficiently explained, we shall proceed to show the effect of various entries upon some of the usual sorts of accounts contained in the ledger, and the manner in which such accounts are balanced or adjusted for the purpose of ascertaining the state of our affairs, and the gain or loss that has attended our transactions.

As materials for so doing, we shall take, as previously mentioned, the transactions connected with the outfit, and with the out and home voyage of the vessel for which the subsequent ship's husband's account is made out. It must, however, be remarked, that for the sake of conciseness, or to bring the whole within a moderate compass, a sort of skeleton only is given of the entries, and that most of the details which are required in the statements of accounts have, for the same reason, been omitted. Such details, however, do not affect the principles of book-keeping, which alone it is our present object to elucidate: but where they may possibly serve the purpose of affording further explanation, we shall refer to the account in Part III., in our remarks upon the entries to be placed in the journal.

The books we shall employ for these purposes are,

The Diary or Day Book.

- .. Waste Journal.
- .. Cash Book.
- " Journal.
- " Ledger.

N.B. It is recommended to those who may wish to make up the accounts here given, for the sake of practice in the entries of book-keeping, to adopt the following or some similar method:—

First. Having a ledger ruled like the printed copy, and having headed the accounts with their respective titles, to enter into those concerned the balances which are to be brought forward, according to the instructions given in the introduction to the ledger.

Secondly. The state of affairs at the commencement of these books having thus been recorded, the transactions in the diary or day book, which may be either copied or not, may be successively entered in the waste journal, consulting, as each is examined, the remarks which follow this book. As a preliminary trial, the heads of the entries may be formed on a slip of paper in this manner:—

May 14.

Cash Dr — to Bills Receivable.

May 22.

Bills Payable Dr — to Cash.

Thirdly. The entries in the waste journal may be carried into the cash book and journal, as directed in the introductions to these books.

Or, they may be carried at once into the ledger.

Or, the cash book and journal may be formed from the day book, or without using a waste journal.

If this last method should be preferred, the list of the heads of the entries may be made out, as before advised, in the following form, the contractions C. B. and J. referring to the two books of entry:

May 14., C. B.—Dr.
To Bills Receivable.

May 22., C. B.—Cr. By Bills Payable.

July 1.—J.
Ship Adela, Dr — to N. Goodwyn.

Fourthly. The transactions having been carried by either method into the ledger, a balance sheet is to be headed, and the balances of the ledger accounts, under date of January 27, are to be entered according to the instructions on this subject which follow the ledger.

THE DIARY, OR DAY BOOK.

The memorandums given in the following book are brief statements of the transactions to be recorded, as the documents from which the entries in the journal, &c. are usually made, cannot of course be here furnished. Similar memorandums are, however, sometimes made in a day book, in like manner as the transactions on board of ship are entered in a log-book, before they are recorded in the ship's journal.

The given name of the ship's husband is William Barclay, that of his co-part owner is John P. Thompson, and that of the ship's broker is Nathaniel Goodwyn, for which parties accounts are opened in their names in the ledger. The general account for the voyage in question is under the title of Ship Adela, 12th voyage; and the particular account for the shares possessed in this vessel by William Barclay, whose books are supposed to be kept, is under the title of Ship Adela, my 3-4ths.

The concluding memorandums have reference to the settlements of some of the accounts as for the interest and charges upon them, and for the distribution of the balance of the ship's account, as shown in the ship's husband's account in Part III.

N. B.—For the principles of journalizing the entries of the transactions, see the remarks following this diary.

REMARKS ON THE PRECEDING STATEMENTS, EXPLAINING THE PRIN-CIPLES AND FORMS OF THE ENTRIES IN THE WASTE JOURNAL.

It has been observed that the first thing to be done in the opening of a set of books, is to record the state of our affairs, or the debts owing to us and by us, with the property we possess at that period. If the books are to be opened de novo, then these particulars, or such of them as apply to the existing state of the party's affairs, are usually recorded in the journal or some other book of entry, in order to pass them to account in the ledger; but if, as in the present ease, the books have been before opened, and the ledger has been before balanced, the particulars of the state of affairs appear in the balance account, and may thence be transferred into the new accounts. For this reason we shall give, in the introduction to the following ledger, this assumed state of the ship's husband's affairs, so far at least as they relate to the accounts of the vessel, and we shall there show in what manner this record is to be made.

May 14.

In journalizing this transaction, we have to direct the debit of the account of Cash, as coming into our possession*, and the credit of the account of Bills Receivable†, as going out of our possession. (See pages 2. and 3.)

May 22.

Bills of exchange are called bills receivable by those who have to receive their amount, and bills payable to by those who have to pay the same; and in order to bring the latter under the rules for accounts of property, we may say that they go out of our possession when we accept them or engage to pay them, and return into our possession when we pay them. This transaction being the payment of a bill, we direct it to pass to the debit of the account of Bills Payable, and to the credit of the account of Cash, as going out of our possession.

June 14.

This being the first transaction that is to be entered to the account

^{*} For the sake of better reference to the rules and directions, we shall generally speak of the transactions as being personally our own, using the plural number, as being the more convenient.

[†] There are three ways of treating the entries of bills receivable: the first is to consider them merely as a sort of security that may or may not be available, and not to notice them in account until they are paid by the party on whom drawn, and then to enter them as cash received to the credit of the person from whom we obtained them; the second is, to enter them as cash received, like as bank notes, when they are remitted to us, and therefore to make no further entry for them when cash is received for them; the third is, to consider them as a distinct species of property, and therefore to raise an account for them in the ledger, in which, as with other accounts of property, they are entered to its debit when they come into our possession, and to its credit when they go out of our possession.

[‡] Bills payable are by many persons considered, with respect to the entries for them in accounts, only as engagements to pay when due, and therefore are not entered, except as to their particulars in the bill book, until they are paid, at which time they are charged to the account of the party, &c. for whom they were accepted, as cash paid on his account. Thus, if this plan had been pursued in these books, and this bill had been accepted on account of the ship, the present entry would have been, Ship Adela Dr — to Cash.

of the ship, it may be stated as a particular rule for this account, that it is to be debited for all disbursements made by us, or for all debts we incur on account of the vessel, and credited for all returns or reimbursements that we obtain on the same account. Here therefore we pass this transaction to the debit of the account of the Ship Adela, and to the credit of the cash account for the money paid.

N.B.—For particulars of most of the transactions in which the ship's account is to be either debited or credited in these books, see the Ship's Husband's account in Part III.

June 20.

The account of N. Goodwyn, the ship's broker, is to be debited, as being indebted to us for the amount we have advanced to him to provide for various disbursements on the outfit of the vessel.

July 1.

The ship's account is to be debited, as directed in the remarks on the entry of June 14., and N. Goodwyn's account is to be credited for the amount owing to him for his disbursements.

Sept. 17. and Oct. 2. as June 14. and July 1.

Nov. 16. and Dec. 13.

We enter these bills as coming into our possession to the debit of the account of Bills Receivable, and we give the ship's account credit for the same, as being part returns on account of the vessel.—See the owner's account with the captain of the Adela in Part III.

December 23.

Being a charge upon account of the vessel, we enter this acceptance to the debit of the account of Ship Adela; and, according to what has been stated in the remarks on the entry of May 22, we also enter it to the credit of the account of Bills Payable.

Jan. 15. and 24.

Each of these receipts of cash being on account of the vessel, we pass each of them to the credit of the account of Ship Adela.

Jan. 27.—1st Entry.

On referring to the ship's husband's account, and to the accompanying account-current in Part III., it will be seen that we charge the ship's account with the balance of the interest upon the payments and receipts, and also with the commission for managing the affairs of the ship: therefore, regarding these charges as being so much profit, we place it, by the third rule, to the credit of the profit and loss account, passing the journal entry for this purpose in the form of—

Ship Adela Dr — to Profit and Loss.*

• If separate accounts were opened in the ledger for Interest and Commission, this entry would be passed in the form of—

viz.

To Interest - - - 6 . 5 . 4

"Commission - - 10 . 0 . 0

Then also, in the last entry, the interest account would be credited.

Jan. 27.—2nd Entry.

The ship's account for the voyage being made up to this date, we pass an entry in the journal for carrying the balance to account in the ledger, by directing the account of Ship Adela to be debited, and the accounts of Ship Adela, my 3-4ths, and of the co-part owner J. P. Thompson to be credited. For remarks on this settlement, and on the particular account for our assumed shares of the vessel, see the introduction to the ship's husband's account in Part III., and the observations on the balances of the ledger.

Jan. 27.—3rd Entry.

In the entry of these charges for interest, made to the two accounts named, the profit and loss account, as before, receives credit.

The transactions being now all entered in the waste journal, we shall have, in accordance with our plan, to transfer them to the cash book and journal, before we carry them to account in the ledger.*

THE WASTE JOURNAL.

The contents of the following waste journal are formed of the daily entries of the transactions detailed in the foregoing diary, and therefore without any classification of the entries of similar transactions.

A journal made out upon this principle is very frequently named a day book, especially when it contains the original entries of transactions or without their appearing in a diary, and then the entries are afterwards, at convenient opportunities, copied or distributed into different books, as will be done in the present instance by placing them in a cash book and a journal before they are carried to account in the ledger. For this reason there are no folios of reference to the ledger here placed against the heads of the entries, as in the following journal; but it is not an uncommon practice, when this arrangement is adopted, to place in the margin against the entry the folio of the book to which it is transferred, although the date is of itself in general sufficient for the purpose of tracing the entry.

This repetition of the entries may be by some persons considered to be unnecessary; but even if it be so in actual practice, it may here serve the very useful purpose of giving some further exercise in the arrangement of entries to those who are not well skilled in the elements of book-keeping. It is also to be considered that supposing this waste journal, or whatever name it may bear, to be the book of primary entry, the transactions are frequently entered in it in a very rough manner, and often require correction or alteration; and on this account, even when no distribution is made of the entries, it is generally judged proper that a copy of them should be taken. A cash book is, however, a book that cannot be dispensed with; and if any contraction of the number of the books is desired, it should be made by not using a waste journal.

THE CASH BOOK.

As the entries in this book consist only of receipts and payments of money, here taken from either the diary or the waste journal, with the balances or amounts of cash in hand at the opening and closing of the account, they appear to require no further explanation than has already been given, excepting that, beginning with the balance of the cash in hand at the commencement of these transactions, we obtain its amount from the general statement of the balances in the introduction to the following ledger; but in the regular making up of a cash book, this balance would be brought into the new account, directly after the old account has been closed, as is done at the conclusion of the book here given. The amount of this balance, now to be brought forward to open this account, £376.10.5.

In order to exhibit the daily balances of the cash account, without making such statements in the usual form, it is the practice to form what is termed a running balance of the cash, by the addition of the debits or receipts, and the subtraction of the credits or payments, the first item being of course the balance brought forward. As an example of an account of this nature, we shall give the following, made up from the successive entries in the present cash book.

To post the contents of this book into the ledger, we debit the Cash account for the receipts, writing, To Sundries, £895.5.10.; and credit the same account for the payments, writing, By Sundries, £503.1.6.; which sums are the differences between the total of the account and the balance on each of its sides. We then credit the accounts of Bills Receivable and Ship Adela, and debit the accounts of Bills Payable, Ship Adela, and N. Goodwyn, for the respective sums for which these accounts are directed to be credited or debited, writing, By Cash, in the former, and, To Cash, in the latter entries.

Instead of thus posting the receipts and payments directly from the cash book into the ledger, it is the practice in many sets of books to bring them into the journal, usually at the end of each month; and when there are several credits or debits of the same account during that period, they are brought together, and then only their amount is posted into the ledger.

Such journal entries for the above would be in the following form:—

When a cash account or any ledger account is made out like the present account in two pages, and when also the title consists of only one word, instead of using the word Account as part of the head on the creditor side, it is not unusual to use the word Contra for the same purpose. Sometimes the word Dr is placed after the title, and thus the head for the cash book may be found in this form:—

CASH	$\mathbf{D}^{\mathbf{r}}$	ı	Contra	$C_{\mathbf{r}}$

THE JOURNAL.

The journal of these books contains the entries of all the transactions except the receipts and payments of cash. The entries are here made from the Waste Journal; but they may be made from the Day Book, or, as previously remarked, they may form the original entries of the transactions recorded.

If the purport of the journal directions be well understood, there will be no difficulty experienced in posting these entries into the ledger. When the entry contains only a single debit and a single credit, in placing the former to the account to be debited, we refer to the counterpart credit; and in placing the latter to the account to be credited, we refer to the counterpart debit: thus, in posting the first entry, Ship Adela D^r—to N. Goodwyn, we debit, as directed by the word D^r, the account of the ship, writing To N. Goodwyn, and credit, as directed by the word to, the account of N. Goodwyn, writing By Ship Adela.

In posting the last entry but one, headed Ship Adela Dr — to Sundries, we debit the account of the ship, writing To Sundries, as several entries make up the counterpart credit; and we then credit the accounts of Ship Adela, my 3-4ths, and of J. P. Thompson, writing in each By Ship Adela, in reference to this account for the counterpart debit,

In the last entry, headed Sundries Dr—to Profit and Loss, we first credit the account of Profit and Loss, writing By Sundries, and then debit successively the accounts of Ship Adela, my 3-4ths, and J. P. Thompson, writing in each To Profit and Loss.

It is to be noticed that before the entries are posted into the ledger, the folios of the latter book in which the accounts to be debited and credited are placed, are usually inserted on the left of the entries, some persons using two columns for this purpose, one for the debtor and the other for the creditor, and others using, as here, only one column, placing the folio of the debtor above that of the creditor when the two accounts occur in the same line or head of the journal entry.

As each entry is posted, it is the common practice to place some mark in the margin to indicate its having been carried to account, and thus prevent its being either repeated or omitted.

THE LEDGER.

The accounts opened in the present Ledger are those which have been directed to be debited and credited in the entries of the transactions in the Cash Book and Journal, with the account of William Barclay, whose books, as husband of the Adela, are here supposed to be kept, and also the account for the 12th voyage of the ship.

Previous to making the entry of any transaction in these accounts, the former balance of each, or the state of each account at the opening of the new accounts, must be recorded: this is usually done from the previous balance account, made out similarly to that of the like account given at the close of this ledger; but, in the commencement of a new set of books, statements of the balances to be brought forward are frequently made as opening entries of the journal, in the following forms, for those now to be brought into these accounts.

These entries are to be posted into the ledger by debiting each of the accounts in the first entry, writing To Balance, and crediting each of the accounts in the second entry, writing By Balance, placing to each its specified sum, and its date the 1st of May, 184—. The counterpart credit and debit of the balance account is not necessary to be made, as the amounts of the entries correspond.

The ledger thus opened is ready for the entry of the transactions from the cash book and journal, according to the directions given in the introduction to each of these books.

REMARKS ON THE BALANCES OF THE LEDGER.

TRIAL BALANCE.

It is the practice of many persons to make what is termed a trial balance of the ledger, when kept by double entry, previous to making and collecting the closing balances. If this be done before the closing balances of the date of January 27th are entered, the amounts of two sides of each account will appear to be as fellows:—.

. Dr.	TRIAL BALANCE.		CF.
77 12 0 280 0 0 1205 15 2 1271 16 3 370 0 0 45 0 0 985 5 10 4235 9 3	- W. Barclay J. P. Thompson - N. Goodwyn Ship Adela, my 3-4ths - Cash Bills Receivable - Bills Payable Ship Adela, 12th Voyage - Profit and Loss -	-	1695 91 417 275 503 140 65 985 62 4235	13 8 1 0 0 5 4	9 7 3 6 0 0 10 6

The object of this trial balance is to show that no debit has been made in the ledger without having a corresponding credit, and by the amount being the same as that of the opening balances, £1753.18.5., together with that of the entries in the Diary or Waste Journal, £2481.10.10, that no entry has been either omitted or twice made; but it is obvious that it will not prove that every entry has been carried to the right account.

In making out a trial balance, those accounts which are equal in the amounts of the two sides may be omitted, as in the above the account for the 12th voyage of the Adela; but of course this cannot be practised if the account is to be checked in the manner we have just stated. The trial balance sheet is, however, less regarded for this purpose than for that of serving as a preparation for the general balance. It can be made out by those who are altogether unpractised in the settlement of accounts; and, when correctly done, it can be used by the book-keeper for making the entries of his balances.

The trial balance sheet is also sometimes made out with the differences instead of the amounts of the two sides of each account, which necessarily lessens the labour of the general balance.

GENERAL BALANCE.

In taking a general balance of the accounts in the ledger, it is to be borne in mind that its chief object is to show the amount of the debts owing to us and by us, and also of the property in our possession; and that a further object is to show the gain or loss that has attended our transactions. The statement of the particulars of the situation of our affairs is called a Balance Account, or Balance Sheet. It is most commonly kept in some book apart from the ledger, and is in the following form for the preceding accounts.*

Dr.	BAL	ANCE.	Cr.
To Ship Adela, my 3 ,, Cash ,, Bills Receivable	930 13 11 768 14 9 230 0 0	" N. Goodwyn " Bills Payable " W. Barclay	-	14 137 20 171 1757 1929	_	97044

The manner in which these balances are collected is as follows:—
W. Barclay's account being the capital account of this ledger, it is not closed until the other accounts have been settled; and we may remark, that if he had taken any money out of the concern, or if he had brought any further capital into it, this account would for the one have been debited, and for the other have been credited †; also that the difference between the two sides of this account, at the time of taking the balance, is referred to under the term of the net capital employed in the concern or trade.

The first account we therefore have to settle is that of J. P. Thompson, from which it appears that the concern owes him £14.1.9. This amount is consequently entered upon the debtor side of his account, to make both sides equal, and as directed by the entry, To Balance, it is transferred to the creditor side of the balance account, as if we were posting the journal entry.

J. P. Thompson Dr — to Balance.

^{*} For the form of the personal account, which is sometimes called a balance account, see the end of this Part.

[†] It is frequently the case that a private or drawing account is opened for these drafts and advances, and then the amount or difference is transferred into the capital account, and the former account is thus closed without its being transferred to the balance account.

N.B.—When an account has been balanced and closed, either the balance may be immediately brought forward on the opposite side of the new account to that on which it was entered in the old account, or it may be so brought forwards from the balance account after all the balances have been collected and proved to be right.

The account of N. Goodwyn is adjusted in the same manner as the preceding account; and it may be noticed, that if these balances had been against these parties, they would have appeared on the debtor side of the balance account.

The account of Ship Adela, my 3-4ths, is for the shares which the party whose books are kept possesses in the vessel. The principle upon which this account is here kept is, that the account is debited for the proportionate part of the first cost, and also for the interest, first upon this amount, and afterwards upon the balance of the account for the time elapsed between each settlement. The account is also debited for its share of any loss, or credited for its share of any gain that arises from each voyage of the vessel; then, in settling the account, the balance is taken at the difference between the amounts of the two sides, as if it were the value of these shares of the ship at that period; and this is continued until the ship's earnings have defrayed the first cost and the interest, being upon the principle that is called working itself off the stocks. When this has been accomplished, all future earnings, and what may be ultimately obtained from the sale of the ship, or from the insurance made upon it, will of course be reckoned as profit.

Hence, in settling the present account, we take the difference of the two sides, enter it as a balance upon the creditor side, and transfer the same to the debtor side of the balance account.

In adjusting an account of merchandise or other property variable in value, a different method is generally pursued, which it may be useful here to explain. In such an account, say of merchandise, as it stands at the time of balancing, the debtor side contains the amount of the former stock of goods as a balance brought forwards, and of the subsequent purchases and expenses attending them. On the creditor side stands the amount of the sales and other returns; and then, when the account comes to be settled, the balance is taken at the estimated value of the stock on hand. The difference which now exists between the amounts of the two sides of the account is the gain or the loss; the former to be carried to the creditor or the latter to the debtor side of the profit and loss account, according to the third general rule.

A supposed account of this sort may stand thus: —

. D _r	MERCH	ANDISE.	$C_{\mathbf{r}}$
To Balance - , Sundries - , Profit & Loss -	4743. 0.10	By Sundries Balance	£ s. d. - 5376 · 5 · 8 - 1420 · 17 · 4
	£ 6797. 3. 0		£ 6797 . 3 . 0

In this manner the owner's account of his interest in a vessel may be settled, and frequently is settled, by making the balance to be the estimated value of his share or shares.

The balances of the accounts of Cash and Bills Receivable are the amounts of these articles of property in hand at the time of taking the general balance, and are transferred to the debit of the balance account. The former corresponds with the balance of the Cash book, and the latter with the amount of the bills not marked off, as having come into cash, in the Bills Receivable book.

The balance of the Bills Payable account is the amount of the acceptances not yet paid, and is transferred to the credit of the balance account. This account has been treated, in making the journal entries, as an account of property; but in its general character, as when acceptances are given in settlement of debts, &c., it contains on the creditor side the amounts of debts transferred from personal accounts (the acceptance of the bills making their amounts claimable by any holder of them), and it contains on the debtor side the amounts of such bills as have become due and have been discharged.

The general account of the ship, under the title of Ship Adela, 12th voyage, has no balance to bring forward, because the balance, as it appears in the ship's husband's account, Part III., has been carried to account from the last but one of the entries in the journal.

The Profit and Loss account is to be left open for the present; but it may be here observed, that if accounts had been opened in this ledger for Interest and Commission, in order to close these accounts the difference between the two sides of each would have required to be transferred into this account. In like manner any loss or gain upon other accounts requires to be transferred into the Profit and Loss account, as has been shown in the supposed account of merchandise.

These balances being collected in the balance account, we have upon the debtor side those in favour of the concern, and upon the creditor side those against it; and the former being the greater in amount, the difference between the amounts of the two sides shows the net present worth. On comparing this with the former net capital, as shown in the capital (W. Barclay's) account, we find the estimated gain attending the management, &c. of the ship's affairs for this 12th voyage. As a general principle, we compare this estimated gain with the difference between the two sides of the Profit and Loss account, or the net gain, and when the two results are the same in amount, we conclude that the ledger has been correctly balanced.

Ì

The following pro formâ statement of these matters from the accounts of this ledger, will possibly serve to place them in a clearer point of view:—

Balance — Dr			-	£ s. d. 1929 . 8 . 8

Net Gain	-	-	•	£ 62.4.6

This net gain being thus proved to be correct, and forming an addition to the capital in the concern, we carry it to the credit of W. Barclay's account and the debit of the profit and loss account, and then close the latter account.

Finally, we balance and close W. Barclay's account, and transfer the balance into the balance account, which may then be closed.

If the balances of the different accounts have not been brought forward when the accounts have been settled, they must now be so done, or the new accounts must be opened either from the old accounts, or from the balance account. In the latter case we debit each account that is on the debtor side, and credit each account that is on the creditor side of the balance sheet or account, in the same manner as was shown in the opening of the present ledger.

ON SINGLE ENTRY.

Before concluding this explanation of the general principles of book-keeping, and of the manner in which its proposed objects may be attained, we think it proper to offer a few remarks on the formation of the ledger by single entry.

When this method is adopted, only personal accounts are generally kept in this book, and the information then to be derived from it can extend no further than obtaining a knowledge of the debts owing to, and owing by, the principal of the concern. In this case, in order to form a complete balance sheet, the amounts of the different descriptions of property he may possess in the concern, as well as further information, must be found from other sources. Let us examine how in general they may be supplied.

The balance of the Cash may be found from the Cash Book, and this may indeed at all times be quite as well obtained from this book as from the ledger account; for it must be considered that whenever the cash book is balanced, whether daily, weekly, or at any other period, the balance is checked with the amount of the money either at the banker's or in the party's possession.

The amount of the Bills Receivable forming the balance of this account is, like the cash, that of the bills in hand, and must, as before observed, correspond with the amount of the bills not marked off in the book in which they have been entered. If they are considered as cash when they are at first received, then of course they are included in the balance of the cash book.

When the Bills Payable are charged to account, at the time of their being accepted, then the amount of the debts of this nature that have not been paid may be found, in like manner as with the other bills, from the Bills Payable Book.

It has been remarked that the balance of any account of property, such as merchandise, which is liable to variation in value, and which, at the time of balancing, is commonly taken at an estimated value, is not or cannot be obtained from the ledger account, and, consequently, for any purpose of balancing this account the information it gives is of no value, although it is essential for ascertaining the profit or the loss.

With respect to the account of the Shares of a Ship, as made up in this ledger, it may be, if thought proper, equally kept and balanced, like as a personal account, in a ledger by single entry, as in one by double entry.

The Ship's Account for the voyage has no balance to bring forward; and its omission in the ledger would, for any purposes of information, be supplied from its place in the book which is usually kept for all the voyages of the vessel.

It thus appears that an accurate balance-sheet may be made out, even if the ledger be kept by single entry; and, from what has been shown, the gross profit or loss may be found from the comparison of the present and original net capitals: but it will be seen that the proof of the accuracy of the latter, and consequently of the result of the balancing, cannot be obtained, unless through the medium of some arrangement for this purpose of the books of original entry.

For several purposes of accounts it would be inconvenient, if not impracticable, to keep the ledger upon the principle of double entry; but where it can readily be done, it should be so made up, if only for the sake of the more full and minute information it affords.

We shall close these remarks by observing, that a balance account is frequently made out in the form of a personal account for the proprietor of the concern; in which case, each of the two sides of the regular mercantile form of a balance account is reversed in its position, and also the profit or loss is included in it, instead of being carried to the proprietor's account, as in the preceding ledger. Taking the foregoing particulars, an account of this kind would thus appear:

Dr. Wm	LIAM BARCLAY in account	with Sundries. Cr.
" J. P. Thomps " N. Goodwyn " Bills Payable	£1695.13.10 By Ship on 14.1.9 , Cash , Bills - 137.8.7 - 20.0.0 - 62.4.6 £1929.8.8	Adela, 3 - £930.13.11 - 768.14.9 Receivable 230.0.0

The purport of this form is to account for the capital he possessed, the debts he now owes, and the profit he has made, which is done by showing that the property he now possesses is equal in amount. If any debts had been owing to him, they would have been entered as a set off against those owing by him; and if any money had been taken out of the concern by him, or if any expenses had been incurred in carrying it on, these would have formed additional items also to the creditor side of the account.

PART III.

SHIPS' ACCOUNTS.

The chief of those accounts which are required to be made out by those who are concerned in the management of the affairs of a ship, and of which, as before noticed, we here propose to give some proformâ statements, are the following:—

The Captain's account with his owners.
The Ship's Husband's account.
The Cash account-current of the same.
The Ship's Consignee's account.

With these we shall give a few forms of the documents referred to in them, such as the portage-bill, the freight-lists, &c.; and we shall commence with the captain's account, as it is in part required for making out the following account.

CAPTAINS' ACCOUNTS.

The captain's account with his owners is, according to its usual arrangement, in the debtor and creditor form of a mercantile account; and, as made out by him, it contains on the debtor side the amounts they would have owed him and the seamen, if he had received nothing from them or on account of the ship; and on the creditor side, the sums he would have been indebted to them, if he had incurred no responsibilities for the vessel, and had made no disbursements.

The entries in an account of this kind are taken from a day or memorandum book*, in which has been entered, in regular order, the charges against the ship, and the reverse †, and generally also the captain's charges against the seamen. for whatever has been supplied to them during their voyage, to be set-off against their wages.

Sometimes the entries in this book are made on opposite pages; but it is more usual to place them consecutively or without such distribution, and to head them with the accounts to which they are to be carried, showing whether they are to be debited or credited; thus—

For Cash rec'd of Mr. Barclay

£5.0.0

January 11. 184-.

SHIP Dr.

For Sundries p'd at Creek, as # No. 23. - £1.2.1

The following account, of which we shall proceed to give some explanation, is for the twelfth voyage of the ship we have named the Adela, of which Captain Charles Watson is stated to be the commander, and M^r. William Barclay the ship's husband. The voyage is to Constantinople and the Black Sea, and back to London.

On the debtor side, the first entries are for payments made by the captain, from the time of his leaving London to that of his landing the pilot in the Downs. The next are for his disbursements at Constantinople, and for a bill which he purchased and remitted on account of the freight; and as the ship stopped at Constantinople on her return voyage, the second disbursements are added to the first, in order to bring together all the payments made in Turkish money. These are followed by entries for like expenses and a like remittance at Odessa. The disbursements and payments of wages on the arrival of the ship in England, with the advances made to the apprentices during the voyage, complete the entries to the debit of this account.

^{*} The keeping of such a book in a regular form, though here assumed to be a general practice, is but too much neglected. It ought to be considered as essentially necessary as a log-book or ship's journal.

[†] The vouchers or documents from which these entries are made should be successively numbered, whether filed or not, as they are thus the more easily put in order if they get disarranged.

On the creditor side are entered the amounts received for freight according to the accounts rendered by the consignees of the vessel at Constantinople and Odessa*; the amount of a bill which the captain drew upon the ship's husband to defray his expenses upon his return voyage; the sums advanced by the same to the captain and his wife; the advances to the seamen or by their desire, with the balances due to some of them, as settled by the same; the amount of the insurance effected, as specified; the cash received by the captain for damage done to the ship; the amount contributed to the Merchant Seamen's Society†, serving as a deduction from the portage-bill‡, which is entered in full on the opposite side; and lastly, the balance received from the ship's husband by the captain for the discharge of his and the remaining sailors' accounts.

Dates are here mostly omitted, as being of no consequence in a pro formâ statement; and for further explanations, reference may be made to the introductory observations on the following account.

Respecting the amount in foreign monies, it is to be noticed, that the rates at which the Turkish and the Russian monies are exchanged into sterling, and the reverse, both in the amounts of the freight and primage to the credit of this account, and in those of the remittances to its debit, are those of the exchanges of the days on which the accounts were made up and the bills were purchased. Each rate is for 1L sterling money.

In the calculation for the freight and primage at Constantinople, the statement in the form of a question is—If 108½ piastres produce 1*l.* sterling, what will 17416-96 piastres and cents produce? Or, for the bill—If 1*l.* produce 109 piastres, what will 150*l.* produce? It is to be observed that the piastre, which is properly divided into 40 paras, is in mercantile accounts very often divided, as here, into 100 cents. Its present value is rather less than 2½d. sterling.

In like manner, for the Russian money, a similar statement for the freight and primage at Odessa is—If 21 60 roubles and copecks produce 1L sterling, what will 3055 50 roubles and copecks produce? A reverse statement is, of course, made for the remittance. The Russian rouble is valued at 100 copecks, and the accounts and exchanges of Odessa are reckoned in banko or paper roubles. According to the preceding rate, the banko rouble is valued at a little more than 11d sterling; but as 3½ paper roubles are legally valued at one silver rouble, which is worth $7\flact[d]$d. sterling, its proper value is not quite 10\flact[d]$d. sterling. In Russian exchanges, however, both roubles have an increased value set upon them.

- † This contribution is usually called Hospital money by seamen and in Ships' Accounts, and Muster-Roll money at the Custom House.
- ‡ No wages for apprentices are entered in the portage-bill referred to in this account, nor is any charge made for the same in the ship's husband's account for this voyage. The owner, to whom the author is indebted for these statements, agreed to pay them certain sums, deducting advances, &c. at the end of their terms of apprenticeship.

[•] As ships are commonly consigned to the care and management of agents, appointed by either the owners or charterers, who receive the amount of the freight, defray most of the disbursements, or furnish money for them, and pay over the balance to the captain, his account of the receipts and payments are chiefly, if not entirely, made out from such agent's accounts, giving the ship credit for the former, and debiting it for the latter.

SHIPS' HUSBANDS' ACCOUNTS.

The accounts of a ship's husband for the affairs of a vessel under his management are either the particular and private accounts for his own shares (being a part owner), for each of the other part owners, for the ship's broker and agents, and for the tradesmen, captain, seamen, apprentices, &c.; or they are the general and separate accounts for the first cost of the ship and for her various voyages.

Acting with all parties, excepting his co-part owners, as if he were the sole proprietor, his accounts with them differ in no respect, as to the principles of keeping them, from general mercantile accounts: they are credited for what he has owed them for the outfit, wages, &c., and for what money he has received from them; and they are debited for what they have owed him for payments made to them, for things they have had of him, and for such deductions or allowances as they have agreed to make him in the settlement of their accounts.

Of the general accounts for the ship, the first necessarily contains her first cost, whether bought or built; and each of the subsequent accounts is either made out in one whole account, or it is made out in two separate parts, for each voyage, or season, or period of her being chartered. When the latter plan is followed, the first part of the account is for the outfit, and all transactions up to the time of sailing; and sometimes, in this case, the amount of the first outfit is placed in the first account, and the whole is considered as being the first cost of the vessel. The second part of the general account then contains all the further disbursements and the returns, until the cargo is discharged on her return voyage, or until her engagement or the season is completed.

The contents of these general accounts are taken from a variety of auxiliary accounts, and, according to what has been said of the captain's accounts, the debtor part contains what the owners, or the co-part owners, in their respective shares, would have been indebted to the ship's husband, if there were or had been no returns; and on the creditor part, what he would, in like manner, have been indebted to them, if there had been no disbursements, or if he had incurred no responsibilities on account of the ship. The nature of these contents will, however, be best shown by an actual account of this kind; and for the purpose of continuing the explanations previously given of ships' accounts, and of showing how the settlement of each is made, we shall give the following ship's husband's account for the same vessel and for the same voyage as that for which the preceding account was made out.

The first class of the entries placed to the debit of this account, consists of the various disbursements caused by the outfit of the ship for her outward voyage. The next is for the captain's disbursements on account of the ship, with the portage-bill, and the insurance the vessel and the inward freight, the outward freight not having been insured, as the owners took the risk of it upon themselves, or became as it were their own insurers.

The last class of these entries is for the pilotage and other expenses attendant upon the ship's return to port; to which are added the discount, as a deduction from the inward freight on the opposite side, the allowance to the ship's husband for management, (here a charge per voyage), and the interest, which will come under notice when the modes of settlement and the cash account-current are taken into consideration.

To the credit of this account are placed the ship's earnings for freight outwards and inwards, with the charge upon the latter for pierage, or the contributions (paid with lights on the debtor side) towards the support of Dovor and Ramsgate Harbours, and the sum received, as in the captain's account, for damage done to the vessel

On comparing this with the captain's account, it will be perceived that his remittances and his draft are not here noticed, because, if the former, as returns, had been inserted, the amount of the outward freight must have diminished by the same sum; and in like manner, if his draft had been entered as a charge, it must have been made a deduction upon the disbursements. So also the contributions to the Seamen's Society are not noticed, because, although they are deducted in settling the wages, they are paid by the ship's husband, which brings up the portage-bill to its full amount.

We have now to consider the modes of making the settlements of ship's husband's accounts. When made out in two parts, the balance of the first part is against the owners, and that of the second part, is in most cases in their favour; and consequently the one is distributed to their debits, and the other to their credits, in the ship's husband's private accounts, in which interest is commonly charged and allowed.

When the general account for the ship is made out in the following manner, or without such division, interest on the disbursements and receipts is charged and allowed according to circumstances. If the supplies for the outfit are furnished by the tradesmen upon such terms of credit as will bring the payments for them to be due at about the period when the ship's husband will be in funds to meet their payment, from the earnings of the vessel, and if also such bills are, in consequence of taking this credit, entered in the general account for the ship at their full amount, then no charge or allowance of interest is made. Otherwise, if the part owners participate in the benefit of the discounts allowed for ready money, and the tradesmen's bills are therefore entered at the net or cash payments, then an interest account is also made out from the actual receipts and payments*, in order to ascertain the amount to be carried into the general

On reference to the books of account in Part II., it will be seen that the payments for the disbursements pass through the broker's account, and that the amounts paid him, are not those of the actual disbursements; but this does not affect the above principle, as the average time is taken from the dates of these disbursements for the ship's account, and the settlement of the cash account between the broker and the ship's husband is made in their private account.

account, and the form or substance of such account will be similar to the following Cash Account-Current, in which, for conciseness' sake, the ship's husband's disbursements are given in only two amounts; and this indeed is often done when a separate disbursement book is kept, in which the dates and particulars of the payments are entered.

This account-current being a sort of summary of other accounts, the debtor part of it is placed under the creditor; and not regarding the amount of the outward freight, because not received by the ship's husband, credit is given only for the bills remitted in payment on the days on which they are due. The amount of the inward freight and pierage, £754.18.4, less the discount, £4.12.6, is entered as being received on the given day; the same is done for the amount received for damage to the ship; and then an average time is found for the whole, by which it is made due on the day stated.

The disbursements for the outfit are the amount of those in the general account before the captain's disbursements. They are, as before stated, net cash payments, and are averaged as to the time of being paid. The bill drawn by the captain is the next entry, and the third is that for the insurance, which was effected at Lloyd's, and which is made due at the end of the year, the usual time for such insurances. The amount entered for the payment of wages, &c. is composed of £134.2.5, the amount of the credits given to the owners, with the exception of the freights, in the captain's account, and £82.12.1, the sum of the disbursements in the general account, on the return of the vessel, and, as with the first of these debits, it is made due on an average day.

In the same manner as with the credits, an average time is found for the amount of the debits being reckoned in cash; and it is upon this that the interest is calculated for the difference between the times of the averages of the two amounts. The average debit being here the earlier period, the interest is added to it, with the commission; and then the balance, which is the profit, and which agrees with the balance of the general account, is or may be carried to account with the interest and commission, in the ship's husband's ledger, in the manner we have shown in Part II., the entries for which, as there noticed, are principally furnished from this account.

SHIPS' CONSIGNEES' ACCOUNTS.

The accounts of a ship's consignees or agents in foreign parts very commonly form part of the contents of the captain's account. In some instances, however, the consignees act in their accounts directly with the owners, as was the case in the transactions to which the following account relates. It is for a vessel which we have named the Walsingham, laden chiefly with cotton, from New Orleans to Liverpool, and which returned thence in her homeward voyage to her owners in New York.

Some other documents are also here given to show their usual forms, the first being the Freight List, as made out in New Orleans; and as the amounts charged herein for the freight of the cotton and specie are greater than those actually paid in Liverpool, as appears from the second document, it may be observed, in order to account for this difference, that on the cotton it is charged upon the gross shipping weight, but is paid upon the net landing weight; and that the dollars are valued in the former at 4s. 6d. per dollar, and in the latter at the prices they were valued at when landed.

The third document is the Freight List outwards from this country. On this it seems unnecessary to make any further remark than that the Numbers and Marks are omitted, the page being too full to admit of their being inserted.

In the account for the Ship, the first entry is for the inward freight; and as this is payable by the consignees at 3 months and 3 days from the day of clearance, the 26th July, the Interest for 3 months (calculated on the net amount, as is usual in Liverpool), and the Commission upon the amount of the freight, are deducted, and the net proceeds are reckoned as due on the 29th July. The sums received for the chartered steerage for the passage of two persons agreed to be taken by the charterer, and for part of the outward freight, complete the credit of the account, which is calculated to be due on average on the 30th July.

In the entries to the debit of this account, commission is charged upon the disbursements, the passage money and the outward freight, and the debits are completed by the entry of the amount of the coal shipped by order and on account of the owners, the Invoice of which shipment, as well as the Account-Sales of the cotton sold on account of the captain, is given at the end of these statements.

Finally, an average date being taken between the average time of the credits and the same of the debits, the balance is made due on the 29th July, and is entered as being paid into the Liverpool Bank on the 8th August, the day on which the account is made out, together with the interest for the intervening time.

In the press.

. On this traveller, the President of the Royal Geographical Society, in his Anniversary Address last year, bestowed the following encomium:—"If we regard M. Adolph Erman as an astronomical geographer and explorer of distant lands, we must all admit that he stands in the very highest rank." And in his Address delivered in May last, the President again made honourable mention of this traveller in the following terms:—"In announcing to you with pleasure that the excellent work of your distinguished foreign member and medallist, Adolph Erman, is about to appear in English, I must not lose the opportunity of stating, that the last communication sent to us by M. Erman is one of very great importance."

"The plan of this work we have before taken occasion to commend. It has, indeed, two great and obvious advantages. In the first place, the narrative style must always be more interesting than the merely descriptive; and, in the next, the corresponding to the property of any particular volume must receive more justice than it could hope for in any restince of general geography. In both respects it must form an admirable companion to such general which it is by no means intended to supersede, but to amplify, explain, and illustrate. To such works, therefore, as Matke-Brun (improved by succeeding editors), the addition of this companion cannot fall to constitute a complete body of geography, so far as regards the countries and objects to be 'surveyed.'"—ATREREMENT.

By J. C. Hudson, Esq. Author of "Plain Directions for Making Wills." Fcp. 8vo. 5s. cloth.

"A 'Guide to the Choice of Professions, Employments, and Situations; containing useful and practical Information on the subject of Placing Out Young Men, and of Educating them with a view to particular occupations." All true—a hand-book that should not merely be thoroughly consulted by every parent and guardian who has any share in the directing of a young man to the choice mentioned, but which should be studied anxiously by every youth who meditates taking a decisive step in relation to his future welfare and happiness. The liberal professions have engaged Mr. Hudson in his Guide; and on every branch which his hand-book comprises, we are convinced that nowhere else will so much that is good and accurate be found in our pointed shape; while, taking the whole circle of his subject, nothing at all approaching its usefulness, in the same way, can be found in our language. One wonders how and where Mr. Hudson could gather so many minute and practically-valuable facts, extending even to a close secount of necessary expenses. His book is the production of a sensible, prudent, philanthropic, earnest, and widely-informed man."—MONTELY REVIEW.

He tells his round, unvariabed tale, with all a sailor's straightforwardness, and never fails to make himself agreeable. In 'The Mission' he relates the adventures of a party of gentlemen who undertook to explore the wildest regions of Africa in search of some relatives who had been shipwrecked several years previously on the coast below Port Natal, and who, it was supposed, had been carried off by the natives. The reader is agreeably surprised by a rapid series of scenes and stiring events in which figure conspicuously rhinoceroses, kangarose, lions, tigers, elephants, makes, gruns, buffalos, giraffes, quaggas, panthers, &c. He follows the adventurous Nimrods, through thirty instructive and entertaining chapters on the natural history of the vegetable and animal kingdom, into the extremest depths of the jungle, where 'Serà sub nocte rudentum and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d. cloth.

"An useful and well-digested 'Elementary Treatise on Physics.' Its plan is intermediate between the mere popular enunciation of physical facts, and the rigorous mathematical demonstrations of more scientific writers. Thus it is well calculated to meet the wants of those by whom a sound general knowledge of the elementary principles of natural philosophy is desired. Though small in size, the book contains more matter than is found in many ponderous volumes; the style is throughout nest, close, concise, and perspicuous, and the sense everywhere clearly and even elegantly expressed. The translation is strikingly teres and explicit; and the tabular and other formulary matter is converted and reduced to English standards with a carefulness and extreme accuracy beyond all praise. The book will be found indispensable to the senior scholars in colleges and schools; its usefulness to mathematical students is obvious and undeniable."—ECLECTIC REVIEW.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION.

Translated by SARAH AUSTIN, Translator of Ranke's "History of the Popes." Vols. 1 and 2.

870. 30s. cloth.

"The excellent volumes before us will increase the reputation of Professor Ranke, which already stands high both in Germany and in this country. If they are not characterized by the same wonderful impartiality which distinguishes his 'History of the Popes,' they display equal research, learning, and impartiality which distinguishes his 'History of the Popes,' they display equal research, learning, and inguist confess that the author's tone in the last of his works is much more decidedly Protestant, and that he at times sinks into the ardent partisan, we do so with some reluctance; and, in making the admission, we would sour readers to remember that it was scarcely to be expected as a thing possible—may, perhaps not to be wished as a thing desirable—that a deep-thinking and sincere man should, in his treatment of such a subject-matter (the restoration of purity in religion), have displayed that calm and cold philosophy which might have been looked for, but which certainly was not found even in our Gibbon's account of its origin and progress. We must add, that it and only occasionally that Professor Ranke permits himself to take a one-sided view of things; and when he does so, his advocacy is so the roughly condications, and at the same time so cernest, as to charm, if these and slaveys convince the reach. It guarantee."—Tixes.

the Catholics, and other miscellaneous works.

"Sydney Smith's Writings, independently of their historical value, as the expression of an age full of intellectual and social activity, have enriched our prose literature with additions more precious than any which it had previously received since the days of Addison and Swift. His criticism is remarkable beyond all comparison for compression of matter, clearness of thought, and a light and clear style of exposition and argumention; his letters have the easy and transparent clearness of Swift in the Drapier, the keen sarcastic edge of Junius, without a particle of Junius's malignity, and with these a light joyous humour, which revels in the exposure and destruction of absurdity."—MORNING CHEONICLE.
